

A Great Blessing

My wife and I have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla. She had rheumatism very severely, with ankles and legs badly swollen, and hardly able to get up and down stairs without help. Many other remedies failed, but Hood's Sarsaparilla entirely cured her. It was only shortly after that I was taken with the same complaint, affecting my limbs and hips, so I just tried the same medicine with the same result. My wife and children take Hood's Sarsaparilla whenever they feel the need of a medicine and it immediately makes them feel better.

A MILD ORIENTAL.

If you consider the circumstances of the case, it was the only thing that he could do. But Pambé Serang had been hanged by the neck till he was dead, and nobody cared whether he was right or wrong.

Three years ago, when the Elms-Leithing steamer Sarabuck was sailing at Adon and the weather was very hot indeed, Nurkeed, the big fat Zanzibar stoker who fed the second first furnace 80 feet down in the hold, got leave to go ashore. He departed a "Seedee boy," as they call the stokers. He returned the full bloated sultan of Zanzibar—his royal highness Sayyid Burghash—with a bottle in each hand. Then he sat on the fore hatch grating eating out fish and onions and singing the songs of a far country. The food belonged to Pambé, the serang, or head man of the lazar sailors. He had just cooked it for himself, turned to borrow some salt, and when he came back Nurkeed's dirty fingers were spading into the rice. A serang is a person of importance, far above a stoker, though the stoker draws better pay. He sets the chorus of "Hya, hiala! Hooah, heh," when the captain's gig is pulled up, to the davits. He heaves the land, too, and sometimes, when all the land, too, and he puts on the whitest muslin and a big red sash and plays with the passengers' children on the quarter deck. Then the passengers give him money, and he saves it for an orgie at Bombay, Calcutta or Pulu Penang.

"Ho, you fat, black barrel, you're eating my food!" said Pambé in the other lingua franca which begins where the Levant tongue stops and runs from Port Said eastward till east is west and the sailing brigs of the Kurile islands gossip with Hakodate junks.

"Son of Eblis, monkey face, dried shark's liver, pig man, I am the Sultan Sayyid Burghash and the commander of all this ship! Take away your garbage," and Nurkeed thrust the empty power rice plate into Pambé's hand. Pambé beat it into a basin over Nurkeed's woolly head. Nurkeed drew his sheath knife and stabbed Pambé in the leg. Pambé drew his sheath knife, but Nurkeed dropped down into the darkness of the hold and spat through the grating at Pambé, who was staining the fore deck with his blood.

Only the big white moon saw those things, for the officers were looking after the coaling and the passengers were tossing in their close cabins. "All right," said Pambé, and went forward to tie up his leg. "We will settle the account later." He was a Malay, born in India, married once in Burma, where his wife had a cigar shop on the Shwe Dagon road; once in Singapore to a Chinese girl and once in Madras to a Mohammedan woman who sold fowls. The English sailor cannot, owing to postal and telegraph facilities, marry so profusely as he used to do, but native sailors can, being uninfluenced by the barbarous inventions of the western savage. Pambé was a good husband when he happened to remember the existence of a wife, but he was also a very good Malay, and it is not wise to offend a Malay, because he does not forget anything. Moreover, in Pambé's case blood had been drawn and food spoiled. Next morning Nurkeed rose with a blank mind. He was no longer sultan of Zanzibar, but a very hot stoker. So he went on deck and opened his jacket to the morning breeze till a sheath knife came like a flying fish and stuck into the woodwork of the cook's galley, half an inch from his right armpit. He ran down elbow before his time, trying to remember what he could have said to the owner of the weapon. At noon, when all the ship's lascar were feeding, Nurkeed advanced into their midst, and being a placid man with a large regard for his own skin he opened negotiations, saying: "Men of the ship, last night I know that I behaved unseemly to some one or another of you. Who was that man, that I may meet him face to face and say that I was drunk."

Pambé measured the distance to Nurkeed's naked breast. If he sprang at him, he might be tripped up, and a blind blow at the chest sometimes only means a gash on the breast bone. Ribs are difficult to thrust between unless the subject is asleep. So he said nothing, nor did the other lascars. Their faces immediately dropped all expression, as is the custom of the orientals when there is killing on the carpet or any chance of trouble. Nurkeed looked long at the white eyeballs. He was only an African and could not read characters. A big sigh, almost a groan, broke from him, and he went back to the furnace. The lascars took up the conversation where he had interrupted it. They talked of the best methods of cooking rice.

Nurkeed suffered considerably during the run to Bombay from lack of fresh air. He only came on deck to breathe when all the world was about, and even then a heavy black cloud dropped from a derrick within a foot of his head and an apparently lashed grating on which he set his foot began to turn with the intention of dropping him on the coiled cargo 15 feet below, and an insupportable sight the sheathknife dropped from the fo'c's'le, and this time it drew blood. So Nurkeed made complaint, and when the Sarabuck reached Bombay that morning he was among 800,000 people.

and did not sign articles till the ship had been a month gone from the port. Pambé waited, too, but his Bombay wife grew clamorous, and he was forced to sign in the Spicery to Hongkong, because he realized that all play and no work gives Jack a ragged shirt. In the foggy China seas he thought a great deal of Nurkeed, and when Elms-Leithing's steamers lay in port with the Spicery inquired after him and found he had gone to England via the cape on the Gravelotte. Pambé went to England on the Vortic. The Spicery met him by the North Light. Nurkeed was going out with her to the Calicut coast.

"Want to find a friend, my trap mouthed coal scuttler?" said a gentleman in the mercantile service. "Nothing easier. Wait at the Nyanza docks till he comes. Every one comes to the Nyanza docks. Wait, you poor heathen." The gentleman spoke the truth. There are three great doors in the world whereat, if you stand long enough, you shall meet any one you wish. The head of the Suez canal is one, but there death comes also. Charing Cross station is the second—for inland work—and the Nyanza docks are the third. At each of these places are men and women looking eternally for those who will surely come. So Pambé waited at the docks. Time was no object to him, and the wives could wait, as he did from day to day, week to week, month to month, by the Blue Diamond funnels, the Red Dot smokestacks, the Yellow Streaks and the nameless dingy gypsies of the sea that loaded and unloaded, jostled, whistled and roared in the everlasting fog. When money failed, a kind gentleman told Pambé to become a Christian, and Pambé became one with great speed, getting his religious teachings through ship and ship's arrival and 6 or 7 shillings a week for distributing tracts to mariners. What the faith was Pambé did not in the least care, but he knew if he said, "Native Ki-li-ti-an, sar," to men with long black coats he might get a few coppers, and the tracts were vendible at a little public house that sold slugs by the "dottle," which is even smaller weight than the "half screw," which is less than the half ounce and a most profitable retail trade.

But after eight months Pambé fell sick with pneumonia, contracted from long standing still in slush, and much against his will he was forced to lie down in his two and sixpenny room, raging against fate.

The kind gentleman met by his backside and grieved to find that Pambé talked in strange tongues, instead of listening to good books, and almost seemed to become a benighted heathen again, till one day he was roused from semistupor by a voice in the street by the dockhead. "My friend—he," whispered Pambé. "Call now—call Nurkeed. Quick! God has sent him!" "He wanted one of his own race," said the kind gentleman, and going out he called "Nurkeed!" at the top of his voice, and an excessively colored man in a rapping white shirt and brand new slops, a shining hat and a breastpin turned round. Many voyages had taught Nurkeed how to spend his money and made him a citizen of the world.

"Hi! Yes!" said he when the situation was explained. "Command him—black nigger—when I was on the Sarabuck. Old Pambé. Good old Pambé. Dam lascar. Show him up, sar," and he followed into the room. One glance told the stoker what the kind gentleman had overlooked. Pambé was desperately poor. Nurkeed drove his hands deep into his pockets, then he advanced with clinched fists on the sick, shouting: "Hya, Pambé! Hya! Hee, ah! Hulla! Heh! Takilo! Takilo! Make fast ash! Pambé! You know Pambé. You know me. Dek ho, feot! Look! Dam big fat lazy las-car!"

Pambé beckoned with his left hand. His right was under his pillow. Nurkeed removed his gorgeous hat and stooped over Pambé till he could catch a faint whisper. "How beautiful!" said the kind gentleman. "How these orientals love like children!"

"Spit him out," said Nurkeed, leaning over Pambé yet more closely.

"Touching the matter of that fish and onions," said Pambé—and sent the knife home under the edge of the rib bone, upward and forward.

There was a thick, sick cough, and the body of the African slid slowly from the bed, his clutching hands letting fall a shower of silver pieces, which ran across the room.

"Now I can die!" said Pambé.

But he did not die. He was nursed back to life with all the skill which money could buy, for the law waited him, and in the end he grew sufficiently convalescent to be hanged in due and proper form.

Pambé did not care particularly, but it was a sad blow to the kind Christian gentleman.—St. James Gazette.
